Teaching and exam periods

The academic year has two semesters and starts with the autumn semester, usually starts in the end of August/beginning of September and ends in the end of January. There is a two week holiday break in the end of the year. The spring semester starts in the end of January and ends in the beginning of June.

Each course is finished by an exam directly at the end of the course. Since the physics courses are usually studied at a 50% pace where you study two courses simultaneously, there is usually two exams in the middle and two exams in the end of each semester. However, this may vary depending on which courses. Re-exams are offered for each course within 2 months of the first exam.
